

Helena Alviar Garcia is an Associate Professor at Los Andes University Law School, Bogota, and was visiting Tinker Professor at University of Wisconsin Law School in Fall 2008. She holds an SJD Degree in Economic Law and Gender, and an LL.M. Degree from Harvard University; and a law degree from the Universidad de Los Andes. She is the Director of the Master's Degree in Law program at the Universidad de Los Andes, teaching courses in: Theory of Private Law, Theory of Public Law, Legal Theory, and Law and Development. She is an expert on feminist approaches to law, and on the relationship between law and development. She has many publications to her credit including: "Aproximaciones feministas al Derecho Comercial" (in Revista de Derecho Privado, No. 27, Uniandes Ed., Universidad de los Andes, Bogotá, December 2001); "The Relationship between Modernization and Law in Colombia during the First Half of the Twentieth Century" (essay presented at the Harvard Law School, 14 April 2002), and "The Influence of Leon Duguit in the Colombian Constitutional Reform of 1936" (essay presented at the Harvard Law School, 8 December 2001).