Dan Danielsen

Professor Danielsen is an experienced lawyer and scholar with dual interests in legal academia and the world of legal practice. He teaches International Business Regulation; International Law; Corporations; Conflict of Laws; and Law and Economic Development. Professor Danielsen's current research focuses on the role of corporate actors in transnational regulation and governance. His work seeks to identify regulatory strategies at various local, national, transnational and institutional levels to shape and harness corporate power to improve social welfare and increase economic development around the globe.

Prior to joining the faculty, Professor Danielsen was executive vice president and general counsel of Europe Online Networks S.A., a pioneer in the provision of broadband Internet and interactive multimedia services to consumers across Europe. Previously, Professor Danielsen was a partner at Foley, Hoag & Eliot in Boston, where his practice focused on the representation of US and European public and privately held business with respect to corporate finance, mergers and acquisitions, strategic partnerships and joint ventures, content and technology licensing and corporate strategy.

Throughout his time in legal practice, Professor Danielsen regularly taught as an adjunct professor at the School of Law, where, in addition to his current course offerings, he taught Torts and Modern Legal Theory. He also taught a course titled Law, Sex and Identity for two years at Harvard Law School. Professor Danielsen is the co-author of After Identity: A Reader in Law and Culture (Routledge Press, 1994) and has written a number of law review articles.

Martha F. Davis

Associate Dean Davis teaches Women's Rights Lawyering, Constitutional Law and Professional Responsibility. She is also a faculty director for the law school's Program on Human Rights and the Global Economy.

Professor Davis has written widely on women's rights, poverty and human rights. In addition to her numerous articles, she recently co-edited Bringing Human Rights Home, a three-volume work chronicling the US human rights movement. In 2008, Bringing Human Rights Home was named one of the "best books in the field of human rights" by the US Human Rights Network; an abridged version was published in 2009 by the University of Pennsylvania Press.

Professor Davis's book, Brutal Need: Lawyers and the Welfare Rights Movement, received the Reginald Heber Smith Award for distinguished scholarship on the subject of equal access to justice, and was also honored by the American Bar Association in its annual Silver Gavel competition. Recently, she filed an amicus brief arguing for the relevance of international law in a domestic force feeding case.

Prior to joining the law faculty in 2002, Professor Davis was vice president and legal director for the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund. As a women's rights practitioner, she was counsel in a number of cases before the US Supreme Court, including Nguyen v. INS, a challenge to sex-based citizenship laws that Professor Davis argued before the court. Professor Davis has also served as a fellow at the Bunting Institute, as the first Kate Stoneman Visiting Professor of Law and Democracy at Albany Law School and as a Soros Reproductive Rights Fellow. During 2008-2009, Professor Davis was a visiting fellow at the Human Rights Program at Harvard Law School, and a non-resident fellow of the Women and Public Policy Program at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government.

Professor Davis chairs the board of directors of the National Economic and Social Rights Initiative and serves on the editorial board of the Harvard School of Public Health's publication Health and Human Rights. She is also an appointed member of the Massachusetts State Advisory Committee of the US Commission on Civil Rights.
